Gallstone Complications after an Enterocystoplasty Cystoprostatectomy Bladder Tumor
Department of Urology, Chu Ibn Sina, Rabat Morocco.

ABSTRACT
We report the case of a gallstone complications of enterocystoplasty in a former tobacco weaned aged 70 years. He received a surgical extraction of stone.

© 2016 Elixir All rights reserved.

Keywords
Gallstone, Tobacco, Enterocystoplasty.

Introduction
Observation
We report the case of Mr. FL aged 60, former smoking with 15 packs / year weaned ago 30 years, no particular medical history who underwent total cystoprostatectomy bladder tumor infiltrating the muscle 14 years ago enterocystoplasty with it.

The patient underwent a ureterovesical ureteral anastomosis in Y of the right ureter on the left.

The histological findings of the surgical specimen was for a PT2N0M0.

The postoperative course was uneventful with good clinical outcome.

The patient was received in consultation there is a month for sensation of pelvic heaviness, without notion of urinary frequency, urination or burns, all operating in a context of apyrexia and conservation condition.

A clinical examination palpation of the mass in umbilical region.

A cyto-bacteriological examination of urine realized highlighted PROTEUS RETTGERIÉ-sensitive to Amoxicillin + Clavulanic acid combination.

Abdominopelvic CT objectified a néovésicale mégalithiase queleques with small stones.

The patient underwent a bladder size cystolithotomie by extraction with a huge computing.
Figure 3. Entérocystolithotomie the operating room.

Figure 4. Lithiasis removed from the enterocystoplasty.

Figure 5. Exhibition of gallstone after surgical extraction.